Domestic Politics

Fall 2000
R. Douglas Arnold

---

This seminar introduces students to the political analysis of policy making in the American setting. The focus is on developing tools for the analysis of politics in any setting — national, state, or local. The first two weeks examine policy making as a whole and the concept of power in political science. The next three weeks examine the environment within which policy makers operate, with special attention to public opinion and elections. Next we focus on political institutions and the making of policy decisions, with attention given to agenda setting, legislatures, political parties, bureaucracies, executives, and the courts. The final week focuses on policy making in New Jersey.

B. Course Requirements

1. Reading. The course operates as a seminar. The amount of reading averages about 210 pages per week, all of it nontechnical. Each student is expected to do the assigned reading before each seminar and come to class prepared for discussion.
2. Discussion. The main event each week is a structured discussion of the week's reading. I provide the structure; you provide the discussion. Our aim is to come to terms with a serious piece of scholarship and to see what lessons it offers for those involved in making and administering public policy. Each student is expected to participate actively in each week's discussion.
3. Three Short Papers. Each student writes three short papers during the course of the semester. These are opportunities for you to discuss the week's readings, unprompted by the instructor or your fellow students.

The key to a good paper is to pose an interesting question and then answer it. You might focus on the value of an author's theory, examining its logical rigor, the plausibility of the arguments, or its relation to other theories. You might focus on the adequacy of the empirical evidence, asking whether the author used appropriate methods, whether the evidence really supports the hypotheses, or whether other evidence contradicts it. Alternatively, you might address the question of how well a piece of scholarship helps to illuminate other happenings in the real world. Does a book help to explain why government makes the decisions it does? Under what conditions does it appear useful? These papers are not an opportunity to summarize the week's readings. You should assume that anyone who reads your paper has also done the week's reading.

These papers should be well organized and well written. A paper that fails to develop an argument until the last paragraph is called a first draft. A paper that fails to anticipate potential counter arguments, is written in the passive voice, or is filled with grammatical, spelling, or typing errors, is called a second draft. A paper that you would be proud to read to the class is called a final draft. I like final drafts.

The class will be divided in thirds, with one group writing in weeks 2, 5, and 8, a second group writing in weeks 3, 6, and 9, and the third group writing in weeks 4, 7, and 10. Your papers should be typed, double-spaced, and a maximum of five pages. They are due at the start of the seminar in which their subjects are scheduled for discussion. I will return each of the short papers with comments a week after they are due.

4. Final Paper. The final paper requires that you apply the lessons of the seminar to explaining why some governmental institution enacted, or failed to enact, a significant policy change. The aim is to explain how and why political forces combined to produce or thwart change. You may choose any level of government — national, state, or local — and you may choose any significant policy change, whether adopted or rejected.

Although these papers require some outside research, the emphasis should be on original political analysis, not exhaustive research in primary source materials or extensive interviews with participants. Some description will undoubtedly be necessary, but your paper should primarily be a piece of analysis. You should attempt to explain why an institution adopted or rejected a proposed policy change.

You are free to choose a policy area in which you already have some expertise. You are free to choose a subject that journalists or other observers have already covered extensively. You are free to select a topic for which the gathering of research materials is relatively easy. I am more interested in observing your analytic skills than your research skills. If you are having trouble choosing, or narrowing down, a topic, please come and see one of the instructors. You should select a topic and submit a one-page description of the policy decision that you intend to analyze by Monday, November 27.

The final paper should be typed, double-spaced, and a maximum of 25 pages, and is due on Tuesday, January 16, at 4:00. The real world of politics and public affairs does not grant extensions, and neither do I. Unlike the real world, I do accept late research papers, but only after assessing a penalty of one third of a letter grade for each day of lateness. The penalty is in fairness to all students who manage to submit their papers on time. Papers should either be placed in my Corwin Hall mailbox or given to my secretary, Reggie Cohen, in 029 Corwin Hall.

5. Due Dates.

Short papers:	Due at the start of each week's seminar.
Research plan:	Due Monday, November 27.
Research paper:	Due Tuesday, January 16.

6. Grading.

Seminar participation	20%
Short papers	30%
Final paper	50%

C. Availability of Readings

1. Reserve Readings. There are multiple copies of each required book on reserve in the Wilson School Library in Wallace Hall.
2. Books Available for Purchase. If you prefer to buy books, the Princeton University Store has copies of 12 books that we will use most intensively.

3. Suggested Readings. The suggested readings are places you can turn if you want to learn more about a given subject. Although all of these works are available somewhere in the Princeton University library system, I have not placed them on reserve for this course.

D. Times and Places

1. Seminar Meetings. Monday, 1:00-4:10 Robertson Hall, Room 3.
2. Office Hours. Tuesday, 1:30-3:30 Corwin Hall, Room 234
Phone: 258-4855 arnold@princeton.edu

Occasional changes in office hours will be announced during Monday's class. I am also available by appointment. Please send an e-mail suggesting various times over the coming week that are good or impossible for you. I will respond with an appointment.

Weekly Readings

1. The Politics of Policy Making (September 18)

Please read the following case study before the first seminar and come to class prepared for discussion.

- a. Required (106 pages)

Richard Himelfarb, Catastrophic Politics: The Rise and Fall of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (1995), pp. vii-ix, 1-103.

2. The Analysis of Power in Politics (September 25)

Power is one of the fundamental concepts in political science. Gaventa reviews several alternative conceptions of power and then seeks to measure power in an isolated Appalachian community. How well does Gaventa capture power relations in this community? How generalizable are his findings to other communities? How useful are the various notions of power?

- a. Required (266 pages)

John Gaventa, Power and Powerlessness: Quiescence and Rebellion in an Appalachian Valley (1980), pp. v-xi, 3-261.

b. Suggested

3. Public Opinion I (October 2)

How do citizens acquire opinions about policies and politicians? Zaller offers a sophisticated theory to explain public opinion. Gamson offers an alternative view point. How well do these authors explain your own opinions? Your friends and family? The mass public? What seems to account for the shape of mass opinion in society?

a. Required (196 pages)

John R. Zaller, The Nature and Origins of Mass Opinion (1992), pp. 1-96.
